LOW PARKS MUSEUM

Low Parks Museum

a unique and historical setting for weddings, corporate and social events

Hamilton lies in the Central Lowlands of Scotland where the Clyde and Avon rivers meet at the head of the Clyde Valley's rich, agricultural lands. This bustling historic town was once the estate of the Dukes of Hamilton. The Duke's Hunting Lodge at Chatelherault, Hamilton Mausoleum, the Low Parks Museum buildings and the Parish Church designed by William Adam are all reminders of links between the town and the Hamilton family.

The Low Parks Museum provides an insight to South Lanarkshire history and is one of the oldest surviving building in Hamilton. It provides an insight into local lives and industry, and tells the story of the Hamilton family, all of which shaped the local area. It is also home to the Cameronian's regimental museum.

During the 17th century, Hamilton was a main stopping place for the Scotland to England stagecoach. The coaching inn is now part of Low Parks Museum on Muir Street. (The old route south through Muir Wynd had long been recognised as difficult for coaches. To avoid this route, a new highway was constructed in 1819 by Thomas Telford, it included a bridge over the Cadzow Burn - and the commercial heart of the town shifted to Cadzow Street).

It has been a museum since the 1960's and now as one complex of historic buildings is a major cultural attraction and venue in South Lanarkshire.

An historical setting offering a stunning backdrop to capture memories of your special day ... our experience and attention to detail will ensure your day is perfect in every way.

“Our wedding was “unique and perfect
in every way”

Low Parks Museum is housed in beautiful and historically significant buildings which were once part of the Duke of Hamilton's estate.

The 18th century Assembly Room, with its original plasterwork and musicians' gallery, forms a striking centrepiece to the buildings.

The Assembly Room is available for civil, religious and humanist wedding ceremonies, civil partnership ceremonies and other special events between mid January and mid November.

The Assembly Room

has capacity for up to 80 guests.
